

IMEC (Marie Cobel) with "Friends"
March 13, 1987

Session 224: Beyond aspective thinking, part 2

Summary: This is a continuation from part 1. The creation of a new idea as an aspect is discussed in detail.

Moving beyond aspective levels of consciousness. Aspects can create, they have their own energy field and form connections between each other and the physical body. Aspects are dependent on man for a body and attention for energy. An Aspect is a thought form and can create a thought form.

If you can become the observer and view the actions of the Aspects without attachment either mental or emotional. Consciousness occupies a point on the triangle of creation; it is the third state of being.

The two points are the physical body, the consciousness and the manifested point is an aspect. This is the makeup of a human being. Withdrawing the energy from these aspects may sound cruel as it would appear they would die if not fed by your attention. Aspects express themselves through the needs they exhibit. The Father, the introvert, the husband, councilor and so on.

Most aspects function automatically, and it is very difficult to separate your conscious from them. If you think of aspects as an energy state it becomes easier to recognize them and imagine the possibility of other energy states existing. When an OBE takes place, consciousness is allowed to exist separate from the aspects. The disassociation and the non-attachment of the aspective form are subdued to such a degree that the consciousness is lifted away from them. The usual dialogues flowing from them to the consciousness are not there. This allows the consciousness to look about in a totally different way. The perceiving at this point of the aspects of an OBE is limited because it does not fit into previous experience. This is why it is necessary to have an aspect which is familiar with the possibility of an OBE to properly place the event into a positive experience. The aspects have a hard time creating something new because they tend to only work with old information. So, a new experience is difficult to comprehend and is easily dismissed. If you want to discover a new idea, then you have to go beyond the earth plane aspects go into the knowingness and translate that knowledge back into something that can be comprehended. New information can only be understood in association with what is already understood. New information requires new words and thus a new aspect.

If you want to create a new aspect you have to go beyond the earth aspects, known technology and known systems. Create an intent to bring about a new aspective system. A new system that you yourself will form. It will be created on the earth, but it will be gathered from the essence of that which is not known yet. When a new aspect is created it must be supplied on a regular basis with energy in order to survive. After a period of time, it can persist on its own. What you create can also create. So, if your consciousness and the new aspect can occupy two points of the triangle then you can create new ideas and new aspects. Counter to this are the old aspects that wish for things to remain the same and for progress to develop slowly with only small increments of development from one model to the next.

This is why it is so difficult to form a new aspect.

It takes a large amount of energy to create a new aspect, it takes the cooperation of your own aspects and also those of others. Only someone who has the knowing can go and get the information and bring it back to this reality. For example, if an engineer wants to create a new system, then they would get a new idea and express it through what they already know about engineering. Knowing does not bring the talent to use the information.

Report by Daniel Erickson